

Keynote Overview

Keynote Title:

We are Losing the Ability to Think and What to Do About It

60 minutes up to 90 minutes

Description:

There is a crisis brewing. We have lost the ability to think critically, to be creative, and to contemplate ideas of the unknown. It's becoming a calamity.

Distractions, social media, technology, and an incessant demand for short-term results over long-term planning are the big winners. In order to mitigate such calamities including being "crazy busy" and the pressure to "do more with less," individuals must return to a state of symmetry between the three components of productive thought: dreaming, deciding and doing.

In this talk, Dan Pontefract introduces tangible, actionable strategies to improve the way we think as organizations and individuals through the cyclical process of Creative, Critical, and Applied Thinking.

To become an Open Thinker, one must understand the relationship between reflection and action, and how it can negatively or positively affect an outcome. It is time to Dream, Decide, Do, and Repeat.

Audience Types:

Leaders: delivered with specific takeaways for leaders to address individually & with the team

Team members: delivered so they can selfassess their busyness vs open thinking dilemma

Post Keynote Next Steps:

- Order Open to Think books
- Half and full-day workshops are available for teams of up to 30 people, going much deeper than the keynote talk

Outcomes:

- Recognize and understand the effects poor thinking is having on an individual's and an organization's performance
- Pinpoint the difference between reflection and action being made aware of indifferent, inflexible and indecisive thinking and how it affects our daily lives
- Realize how technology can both help and hinder everyone's state of open thinking
- Distinguish the traits that make up Open Thinking—and learn ways in which to bring them into your daily habits
